

Advanced & Global Techniques

India's bridal artistry, Korea's glass skin, the Khaleeji smoky eye, Western editorial sculpting — taught with reverence

Learning Objectives

- Perform a traditional Indian bridal eye and lip look
- Achieve Korean "glass skin" and gradient lip technique
- Perform a Khaleeji-style defined, smoky eye
- Perform Western editorial contouring and strobing technique

Four traditions, each with its own name and history

As in Course II's global styling module, this module teaches four distinct traditions individually, by name, rather than blending them into a single generic "glam" service.

Four distinct traditions of technique, each with its own history and its own name.

India · Bridal artistry

Traditional Indian bridal makeup builds around bold, richly lined eyes — kajal along the waterline extended into a defined wing — paired with deep red, maroon, or berry lip colour, and often a touch of gold-toned mica along the brow bone and cheekbones, echoing the bridal jewellery it is designed to be seen alongside. Technique demands especially long wear given ceremony length, precise symmetry in the winged liner, and colour saturated enough to hold its own beside heavy jewellery and rich fabric, per the occasion-lighting principles from Module Seven.

Korea · Glass skin and the gradient lip

"Glass skin" describes an intensely luminous, poreless-looking finish achieved through skincare layering and light-reflecting, dewy base products rather than heavy foundation — a direct expression of the skinimalism philosophy from Module Six. The gradient lip, concentrating colour at the centre of the lips and softly blending outward, produces a soft, bitten, youthful finish quite different from a fully lined, single-colour lip.

The Gulf region · The Khaleeji eye

The Khaleeji eye — associated with Gulf Arab beauty tradition — is a dramatic, heavily smoked, precisely winged eye, often extended well beyond the natural eye shape with bold, blended dark shadow and a sharply defined lower lash line, typically paired with fuller, defined brows and a comparatively muted, matte lip that lets the eye remain the clear focal point. Technique relies on meticulous blending to avoid harsh edges despite the drama of the finished shape.

Western editorial · Sculpting and strobing

Editorial contouring, developed for high-definition photography and stage lighting, uses more pronounced cream or powder shading to sculpt bone structure dramatically, paired with strobing — precise, concentrated highlight on the very highest points of the face for a lit-from-within effect under strong lighting. This is deliberately more graphic than everyday contour, built for cameras and distance viewing rather than close, natural daylight.

The discipline beneath all four

Each tradition solves for something specific — ceremony duration and jewellery in Indian bridal work, skincare-forward luminosity in Korean technique, dramatic focal balance in the Khaleeji eye, camera performance in Western editorial sculpting. Teach each by its correct name and context. A "smoky eye" on a service menu, unlabelled, erases the specific tradition and technique a client may be asking for by name.

Practical Activity · The Four Traditions Portfolio

Perform at least two of the four techniques taught in this module on a partner or model, and research (with proper attribution) the other two well enough to explain their history and technique aloud. Photograph your two completed looks for your capstone portfolio.
