

Building a Spa Routine

Prescribing for a real person — across lifestyle, climate, maintenance capacity, and budget

Learning Objectives

- Recommend a body-care routine appropriate to a client's lifestyle and needs
- Adjust body care recommendations for India's monsoon and dry-season conditions
- Set a realistic waxing maintenance schedule based on natural hair regrowth
- Prescribe within a client's budget without compromising body health

A routine, not a single memorable appointment

What a client does for her body between appointments determines whether a single excellent treatment becomes a lasting habit or a one-off indulgence quickly forgotten. This module closes that gap with specific, realistic recommendations.

The at-home foundation

1. Dry body brushing or gentle exfoliation — once or twice weekly, supporting circulation and smoother skin between professional treatments.
2. A body oil or lotion appropriate to skin type — applied daily, ideally while skin is still slightly damp for better absorption.
3. Broad-spectrum SPF on exposed skin — extended from Course I's face-focused habit to the whole body, especially after any exfoliating or waxing treatment.
4. A weekly moment of unhurried self-massage or oiling — even five minutes, echoing the Abhyanga philosophy from Module Five.

India's climate: what changes and why

- Monsoon and humid conditions. Favour lighter body lotions over heavy oils for daytime wear, while reserving richer oiling for evening or pre-wash use; watch for increased risk of body acne and folliculitis in humid, sweaty conditions.
- Dry winter conditions. Favour richer creams and more frequent oiling, and reduce exfoliation frequency slightly, as already-dry skin can be further stressed by over-exfoliating in low humidity.

A realistic waxing maintenance schedule

Hair regrowth cycles vary by area and individual, but a general maintenance window of three to five weeks between waxing appointments allows hair to reach a suitable length for the wax to grip effectively (generally at least 6mm, per Module Eleven) without the client experiencing excessive visible regrowth in between. Set this expectation clearly at the point of service, and note that hair typically grows back finer and sparser over time with consistent waxing.

Prescribing within a budget

If a client's budget is limited, prioritise sun protection and a well-matched daily lotion first — the two habits with the most compounding long-term benefit — and treat professional exfoliation treatments and elaborate product layering as the most postponable category. A simple, consistently applied daily routine will outperform an expensive but irregular one.

Practical Activity · The Full Prescription

Using the intake record from Module Three, build a complete at-home body care routine for that same client or model, including one seasonal adjustment and a realistic waxing maintenance schedule if relevant. File this alongside your earlier records for the capstone.
